

Dear Hiring Team, For ten years, I owned the SAP HR process layer at L'Oréal globally - handling change requests, validating deployments before go-live, and making sure data integrity held all the way to Core HR across 40+ countries. What Accor describes for the Digital Process Owner role is exactly that work, applied to recruiting and onboarding. The SuccessFactors Onboarding module is familiar ground - it was part of the platform portfolio I managed on the L'Oréal account, in a multi-brand, multicultural environment where every local HR team had its own constraints and expectations. Gathering requirements, prioritising competing requests, producing adoption materials that non-technical field users could actually use - that was the job, at scale, for a decade. The AI preboarding and onboarding angle is something I find genuinely interesting. I use generative AI tools daily, I co-founded WallOfTraders.com - a SaaS startup built from scratch - and I think the most tangible HR tech gains right now are in automating the repetitive process steps that drain HR teams. Not as a buzzword, as a practical lever. I don't have a hospitality background. What I do have is experience managing HR processes for teams spread across five continents, aligning corporate and field stakeholders under tight release deadlines - the kind of operational complexity that teaches you to simplify when everything else pushes toward adding layers. I'm based in Anglet, available from 10 August 2026, and comfortable working remotely with occasional trips to Paris. I'd genuinely enjoy a conversation about the role. Gaëtan François
